The Center for Policy Research (CPR) is the first Mongolian non-governmental policy research institution.

Established in 1998 CPR has gained extensive experiences and well known in the areas of rural development, agriculture, livestock/herder development, agricultural value chains, land reform, pasture and risk management, community development, rural poverty and social issues and environmental management.

CPR is engaged in extensive training, promotional and advocacy activities in supporting sustainable pastureland management in Mongolia. In this area, CPR has successfully cooperated with government organizations, multilateral and bilateral donors, private and civil society organizations and herder communities in all aimags and soums of Mongolia. The National Federation of Pasture User Groups (NFPUG) was one of our partners in promoting sustainable pastureland management including contractual and responsible use of pastures by herders.

CPR is pleased to cooperate with all relevant organizations including NFPUG in making the International Year of Rangeland and Pastoralists a success.

We are ready to provide relevant technical support and share our experiences during the event.
